Letter from Petersburg.

[Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.] Petersburg, September 26, 1874, The special committee having in charge the proposed Conservative pic-nic to Wellderôt decided to-day to postpone the sion from Tuesday next to the Friday lowing. The reason which led to this hange of programme was not any failure to of the tickets, which have met with on seems already fully assured, but cerconsiderations made it more convenient at the day should be altered from that orially intended.

Lientenant W. C. Johnson on yesterday aboutted his resignation as an officer of the police corps. His successor will be elected the City Council at its regular session next Thursday.

Justice Kearney gave further occasion for Radical howls of horror this morning by oring the penalty of ten good stripes to be to a colored citizen for the eccencity of stealing corn.

imith and Burgess at Louisa Court house-Speeches from Both-The Compliments of the Season Passed Angry Words and Bloody Sentiments, but no Blows.

[Special telegram to the Dispatch.] Louisa C. H., September 26 .- The Radicals of this place and neighborhoods adjacent turned out in great force to-day to hear a discussion which it was rumored would take place between Hon. John Ambler Smith and Mr. Rush Burgess, the rival aspirants for the Radical nomination for Congress. Mr. I. and ready sale. The success of the H. Shields, from Richmond, opened the exercises, after which Rush Burgess occupied the stand. He took up much time in discussing ex-Governor Walker's record, and charged that he was the author of "True Republicanism"; that he was an extreme Radical; that he helped to saddle an enormous debt upon Virginia, and continued at length with similar allegations. In relation to the civilrights bill. Burgess said that he would not vote for it as it stood. He was not in favor of mixed schools, but wanted all other equal rights for the negroes. His hits at Smith were not rancorous, and he concluded by asking Smith, who was present, to give an account of his stewardship in Congress, and in that way let the people who sent him there see if he bad truly represented them. The down train having whistled, Mr. Burgess concluded his remarks by announcing that he must get aboard as he had an engagement to speak in Manchester at night.

Smith said Burgess left because he knew he was going to tell certain things on him. He. reviewed Burgess's history and abused him in the harshest terms. Burgess, he declared, was nominated by a set of bribed men; anday night will probably be a there were men in the sound of his voice, he said, drunk with Burgess's whiskey. He asserted that Burgess had lifted his hands to the skies and sworn that he never aided, abetted or sympathized with the Confederacy while the whole family were Democratic, and Rush was the twenty-seventh man in Petersburg who voted for the ordinance of secession, and the ninety-seventh who voted for Jefferson Davis for President of the Confederate States. He (Burgess) also gave five hundred dollars to support a Confederate soldier company. He could bring the necessary records to prove all these charges. He (Smith) thought Burgess stood about as much chance of going to Congress as a "cur dog," and if he (Burgess) was nominated on the 7th of October, Walker would undoubtedly be elected. The people, in his opinion, could not trust their rights to such people as Burgess. He (Smith) did not want to go to Congress-it was no bed of roses--but he saw how these fellows were fooling the negroes, and he didn't want them misrepresented. Further, he stated that Burgess had spent $4,000 in buying colored votes. Smith theu came down on Walker in sharp style.

Incidentally he remarked that a colored man from Louisa, John M. Langston, wrote the fourteenth amendment.

Several other speeches were made. The Louisa crowd will meet again next Tuesday to nominate a candidate for clerk.
